CURRENT TRENDS IN CANADIAN AND
BRITISH TRADE WITH CUBA

25X1

Between 1961 and 1963, Canadian exports to Cuba declined from about $30.1 million to $7.6 million, or by nearly 75 percent. Over the same two-year period, exports to Cuba by the United Kingdom registered a 57 percent decline to a level of $5.7 million. The primary cause of this drop in exports to Cuba was the reorientation of Cuban trade to the Communist Bloc, and the consequent lack of foreign exchange, particularly in 1962. In the case of both the United Kingdom and Canada, the trade curtailment was sharper than the rate of decline of Cuban imports from the Western trading nations in total. (See Table 1.)

The revival of Cuban purchases from the West in 1963 apparently did not benefit Canada because Cuba now relies on the USSR to satisfy her wheat import requirements. If the wheat purchased by the USSR from Canada, and delivered to Cuba in 1963, were included in the data as an export from Canada to Cuba, rather than as an export to the USSR, then Canada's 1963 exports to Cuba would have been about $16 million, rather than $7.6 million.

When exports to Cuba by Canada and the United Kingdom are placed on a quarterly basis, the moderate downward appears to be continuous throughout 1962 and 1963. Hence, if there is to be a reversal of trend, as seems likely, it did not occur prior to the first quarter of 1964. (See Table 2.)

[REDACTED]

As Table 3 indicates, the imports of Canada and Europe from Cuba increased substantially during 1963. The increases resulted from the combination of a larger volume of sugar imports from Cuba and the higher sugar prices that prevailed during 1963. Table 4 shows that the volume of sugar imports more than doubled in 1963. Average prices paid for Cuban sugar were also about twice as high as those paid during 1962. Non-sugar imports from Cuba probably declined somewhat in 1963. The 1964 estimates are based on known contracts and therefore represent minimum figures. It should be noted that prices paid for Cuban sugar in 1964 will average about 30 percent higher than in 1963; therefore, in value terms, Cuban exports in 1964 will probably equal those of 1963.
